Is building or buying a house better?

Whether building or buying a house is a better option really depends on your situation. Whenever I have a big decision to make (and what's bigger than buying a house?

), I like to weigh the pros and cons. So, here are some pros and cons of building a house and buying a house to help you decide the best way to go.

Should you buy or rent a home?

Homebuying costs more upfront, but you can get some of that back (and potentially more) when you sell the home. To match or exceed a home buyer's return on investment, renters must invest, not spend, those savings. When comparing the two options, renting can often come out ahead, at least compared to the early years of a home purchase.

Why should you buy a new home?

Low energy costs: New homes often feature the latest energy-efficient systems and materials, which usually lead to lower energy bills. Newness: You get to start fresh as the first owner of your home and enjoy brand-spanking-new everything. I love that new house smell—don't you?

What should you consider when buying a new house?

Compromises: You probably won't find a house that checks off every single need and want on your wish list, and you might have to settle for some things you don't like. Updates: The previous owner's style might not match yours—maybe the paint colors feel off or the fixtures aren't your taste.

Should you buy or sell your first home?

When you sell your first home, you can use that equity to help pay to build your next home. If you're an experienced home buyer, then building a house could be a fun adventure for you. But no matter what, don't take on a monthly payment that's more than 25% of your take-home pay—otherwise, you could end up house poor!
